Dear Ms. Tarr:

Mr. Abed Charamand, who has been identified as an inventor, no longer works for AT&T or AT&T Wireless Services. On October 15, 1999, he told me that he is hesitating signing the formal papers so that he can contact his former boss (at AT&T or AT&T WS) to determine if he still is entitled to some sort of reward or incentive given to company inventors. I will let you know if he chooses to sign or not to sign.

VIA OVERNIGHT MAIL

Dear Abe:

It is our understanding that our outside counsel, Paul Qualey of Kenyon & Kenyon, has presented to you formal papers for you to execute regarding the patent on which you are named as an inventor and which references an invention which you worked on during your employment here at AT&T Wireless Services, Inc. I am told that you have refused to sign those papers alleging that your ex-manager, Mr. Jim Haarbauer, promised you additional compensation which, you also allege, has not been paid.

Let me make two points. First, Mr. Haarbauer has told us that he did not promise you such compensation. And second and most importantly, regardless of what you allege had been promised, you are contractually obligated under your Employment Agreement (attached), specifically section 13(c), to execute the formal papers presented to you and return them to me promptly. This obligation cannot, per the terms of your Employment Agreement, be altered except by a written statement signed by both you and the Company (AWS) (Section 21). If you have such a signed writing showing that you were promised additional compensation for the work that you did regarding the invention on which we are seeking patent prosecution, please forward that document to me immediately at the address stated above.

In any event, please promptly sign those formal papers attached for your convenience and return them to my attention promptly.

If you have any questions, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Very truly yours,
